722 spent by workers on active military service should count
461 more than the actual days when computing the time which entitles the workers to paid holidays.

War-time wages.

722 To safeguard the living wage of the workers and to
465 keep it in alignment with the rising costs of living the Government ordered that wage supplements should be paid above the regular wage rate stabilized for the duration. The payment of these war-time wage supplements was ordered on three occasions, consequently the wage rate has risen thirty per cent on the average since the beginning of the war.

Enlisted workers.

701 Several new legal and administrative measures were
427 passed to safeguard the interests of enlisted men and their dependents. In 1941 an order in council directed that for non-payment of rents enlisted men cannot be made to vacate houses, apartments or living quarters rented by them and the courts can adjudge that their rents be payable by easy instalments.

Discharge.

701 Industrial and commercial employees cannot be
466 discharged while they are serving in the forces. If the employee has received living quarters from his employer in addition to his wages they cannot be taken away from him or from his dependents. Enlisted men must be re-employed if they report for work within eight days after their discharge from the forces.
